Hello Hallelujah People-

Well, we did it, Sandra and I are now married!

Those of you who made the service witnessed a great time and later on we served a Hallelujah friendly banquet for over 200 people. That was an experience for all concerned but it actually worked, was really good food, and didn't cost all that much as far as these things go. It was actually less expensive than it appeared too, as we had huge amounts of food left over and fed a good part of the Bible College with the leftovers next day.

This week coming Sandra and I will be going to Mexico for some more dental work. I'll be coming back Tuesday, Sandra on Friday. So the meeting will be a bit of a welcome home for Sandra. I wasn't sure whether to have the meeting or not this time, but since it's a regularly scheduled event it seemed best to do it.

It will be less of a diet meeting this time and a little more of a reception, but still should be good. We'll finish off a bit more of the (vegan) wedding cake, as well as whatever we have, so you're free to bring a dish if you care to. I think I'll throw in some baked potatoes (anyone have a good topping?) and of course, we always try to have a good salad on hand.

So, come if you can make it...
